
Mathew McCaslin (American, b. 1957)

Loop D'Loop, 1999

Electrical hardware, fluorescent light fixture, black light bulb

Dimensions variable (shown: approximately 60" x 24" x 14")

Edition of 15

Much of Matthew McCaslin's work deals with the intersection of nature and technology. He combines everyday construction materials or consumer electronics in a way that may invoke chaos or disorder, or formalism and minimalism. He works aesthetically with these materials, bringing our attention to an aspect of a man-made environment that is frequently overlooked, taken for granted or simply not thought of in an art context at all. Loop D'Loop is intended to be installed in a number of different ways. Each owner is as involved in the work's design as the artist himself was. It is an inherently playful piece, condensing some of McCaslin's key ideas into flexible and versatile sculpture. Not for sale.
